Aboriginal—Indigenous Theology Workshop

Workshop Description

Indigenous Theology, commonly known as Teología India, is one of the most exciting and innovating theological developments in the last two decades. Indigenous Christians across the continent reflect on their communal experiences with God. Unfortunately, little is known about these beautiful theologies, and misconceptions and fears abound. In this rare three (3) hour workshop, we will learn its history, its central tenets, and its contributions to our faith and Catholic tradition.

August 14, 2021, 9a.m. to 12 p.m.

Zoom Event—Cost: $10.00

SPEAKER INFORMATION

Dr. Titizano La Fuente earned an MS in International and Agricultural Development from UC-Davis and an M.T.S. in Theological Studies from the Franciscan School of Theology. A native of Bolivia, Titizano recently completed her Ph.D. in Systematic and Philosophical Theology from Graduate Theological Union. Her transdisciplinary research focuses on indigenous philosophies and spiritualities, feminist epistemology, and decoloniality. Currently, she is working on indigenous feminist theologies and decolonial intercultural hermeneutics. Titizano is a constructive comparative theologian. She specializes in Indigenous thought and Christian theology with an emphasis on Trinitarian pneumatology, feminist, and liberationist theologies. She currently serves as a Board Member for Memoria Indígena, a Latin American organization dedicated to "recognize and remember indigenous Christians' memories in Abya Yala," and is member of the Comunidad de Teólogas Indígenas del Abya Yala.
